SOCIAL and

HE Richmond markets, in these days of midsummer plenteousness, are attractive centres where, in the early mornings's the stay-at-home contingent of Richmond society lingers to exchange views and opinions on most subjects under the sun in which they are interested to the point of approval or condemnation.

The (lower-yeardors' row, lifet now.

The flower-vendors' row just now embroiders the street entrance to the Sixth Street market with vivid dashes of color. Great bunches of nasturtiums contrast with the silken scarlet tiams contrast with the silken scarlet of poppy blooms. Geraniums, verbenas and long stalks of vari-hued gladioli give latitude of choice to the lover and the purchaser of midsummer nosegays.

The gatherer of simples has also a full stock in his fragrant collection, and the crier aloud of "Sweet Javender! Sweet lavender!" will find many to turn aside at the prospect of securing a store of these little flowers "that keep their savor and freshness all winter long."

Supplementing the effect of the flowers is that produced by the display at the fruit stalls, where striped July applies ile cheek by jowl with the luscious peach, apricots and plums, the deep tones of the orange and the pale gold of lemons.

deep tones of the orange and the pale gold of lemons.

But the crowning feature of the midsummer display is found in the melons. "Nettie Gems" are already doing prime credit to Hanover, and watermelons bear mute but eloquent evidence of the time when even the humblest may endown and the summer of the time when even the humblest may endown and answered nowadays is. "Where are you going?" or, "What do you intend doing with the rest of the summer?"

An old Virginia gentleman, a bon vivant of former days, encountered a friend some years ago on a brilliant and cloudless July morning. Each had a market basket, and the latter sald to the farmer: "I thought you had gone with your family to spend the summer away from town."

"Then," replied the bon vivant, "you had yourself mistaken, sir. My family lave gone, it is true, but I am delighted to remain, for nowhere can one enjoy life to better purpose than in Richmond during July and August."

Judge Refuses to Grant Rehearing in Injunction Case on New Branding Rules.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 8.—The suit of the distillers to enjoin the internal revenue officials against the new branding and marking rules met with another defeat late yesterday, when United States Circuit Judge Lurton declined to grant a rehearing to the local whiskey distillers in their injunction case against the commissioner of internal revenue to provent enforcement of the new branding and marking rules. Judge Lurton said that if he did take a hand at this time it would disqualify him should the matter ever be presented to the Court of Appeals, over which he prefers to leave distinct from his Circuit Court matters.

distinct from his Circuit Court matters.

The matter was presented for the distillers by Atterney Lawrence Mexwell. who was joint counsel with W. M. Hough in the original case, which is brought in the name of the Clifton Springs Distilling Company. When Attorney Maxwell appeared in chambers before Judge Lurton the latter sent for Federal Attorney McPhorson, in order to give him an opportunity to be heard if it was thought advisable and not permit him to be taken by surprise, as was the case when they restraining order was secured without his knowledge.

However, Judge Lurton, after stating his reason for declining to hear the controversy, said that it was not necessary to hear the government's side, at all, Federal Attorney McPherson was anxious to reply to some of the statements made by Attorney Maxwell, but was not river was nothing presented upon which he could be heard.
